FIRMWARE INFORMATION

Thursday, February 13, 2020

Printer manufacturers use firmware (a type of software), along with the chip on the printer cartridge, to utilize the full printer functionality. Firmware can also be used to add features, improve function and to fix any problems the printer may have. In some instances, a firmware update can “lock out” or disable, a compatible or remanufactured toner or inkjet cartridge.

Keeping informed of all printer firmware updates is a key way to prevent your remanufactured cartridge from malfunctioning in your customer's printer.

Printer firmware is identified by its version number and is typically displayed on the printer LCD screen at start up or on a printed page such as a “Printer Configuration Page”. Firmware versions are typically different between printer types. In addition, there can be many versions for the same printer type because of updates by the OEM.

Below is our Firmware Status Reference Chart for Lexmark® and any related printers. The firmware in this chart have been tested and proven to work with our chips. If the firmware in question is not listed, you have a chip issue, can't locate the chip or printer model you are seeking, or want to report a new firmware version, please contact our technical support team or your sales representative.

The chips we use are designed and manufactured to be the most resistant to OEM firmware changes.

Note: Lexmark and related printers have both base and engine firmware. Base firmware refers to the basic utility functions of the printer and engine firmware is for the operating system in the printer. A change can occur in both or individually, which is why you may see a base firmware listed with two different engine firmwares or vice versa.
